

Superstorm Sandy was the 18th named storm, 18th tropical cyclone, and the 10th hurricane of the 2012 Atlantic hurricane season. Sandy was a category 2 superstorm with winds stretching out about 1,100 miles from end to end, making it the largest Atlantic tropical system on record. The impact from Sandy stretched from the Caribbean to New England, causing a record-breaking 13 foot storm surge in New York City and extensive flooding along the East Coast.
